

King's Student Law Review

For the attention of LLB, LLM/MA and PhD students

Dear all,

The King's Student Law Review is currently looking for students to submit articles between 5,000 and 7,000 words (excluding footnotes). The King's Student Law Review (KSLR) is a King's College London publication. It is edited by King's College London PhD students, and seeks to publish the very best of legal scholarship written by students at King's and other leading law schools. The KSLR is a prestigious publication that has a wide online presence and is listed in the international database HeinOnline.

The KSLR is an exclusively student-run enterprise, with emphasis on improving academic writing and legal knowledge amongst students. As such, the KSLR aims to provide detailed feedback and comments towards the improvement of the articles received and considered for publication.

Submissions are welcome from all law students, whether at the undergraduate or postgraduate level. It is possible to submit appropriate work that was written as coursework. Students from all universities are invited to submit papers for consideration by the Editorial Board in areas such as:

Public and Constitutional Law, Human Rights, Tax Law, Financial Law, Commercial Law, Business Law, Public International Law, Private International Law, Legal Theory, Criminal Law, Criminology, EU Law, Tort Law, Competition Law, and Intellectual Property Law

Editors, based on the quality of writing, research and analysis, will make selections for the publication through blind peer review.

Submissions for the next issue of the King's Student Law Review are due by:
18th November 2018.

Please submit one article between 5,000 and 7,000 words and an abstract (300 words maximum) using the submission form on our website. For style guidelines and citation format click here.
